In situ

DAYGALLERY

Just about all the works in this exhibition reflect my interest in the way that animals and plants always develop to suit the landscape they inhabit.

Although I've been known to take flights of fancy and put creatures in some wildly fantastic locations, I nearly always portray my subjects in situ. Recently, this has meant animals and plants in their natural habitat in the Australian bush (often in my own back yard), as subject and surroundings are part of natural whole and illustrates the unique beauty that is on display all around us in our World Heritage home.
